IEEE IIITD conducted an event named Code Acrostic, where they had to write a working piece of code that is also an acrostic, which means that the first letter of each line of their code, when combined, forms a message. At the same time, they had to make sure that their code is syntactically correct, runs, and produces an interesting output.

vim: codeacrostic.py
I if True:
E     e = ["E", "I", "E", "E"]
E else:
E     e = ["E"]

C c = print
O o = input
D def t(s):
E     eval('print("Welcome to")')

A     assert s == "IEEE"
C     c(s)
R     return
O o("Enter anything to get started: ")
S s = "".join(sorted(e, reverse=True))
T t(s)
I if s == "IEEE":
C     c("Code Acrostic!")

BitCode by ACM

ACM IIITD hosted an exhilarating team event named BitCode, a blend of coding and an auction, where students had to stir things up with a limited budget for each team. So, being good at coding was not the only thing that proves your skills, the team had to be good at money efficiency too, teaching the students how much it takes to be a programmer. There were exciting cash prizes for the winners.

The poster features the ACM IIITD logo in the top left corner. The main title 'BidCode' is prominently displayed in a large, bold, blue font. Below the title, the registration deadline is stated as 'Last date for registration - 26th June, 11:59pm'. A central text box contains the event's theme: 'Do you have what it takes to be money-efficient as well as be a pro-coder? Come join us for a memorable evening filled with loads of fun and learn to manage your finances.' The lower half of the poster depicts an auctioneer at a podium with a gavel, silhouettes of an audience, and a digital display board. The board lists four items for auction: a Python logo for 500 coins, a C++ logo for 100 coins,  $N^2$  for 750 coins, and  $N \log N$  for 250 coins.
